TABLE A5. Table showing a selection of archaeological heritage sites attributed to the Frisians in the Wadden Sea area.

	STATE PARTY	BRIEF DESCRIPTION
Bremen-Mahndorf	Germany	Excavated Saxon settlement and cemetery from the 4 th – 9 th century AD. Sunken-floored huts and other buildings, valuable imports from the Frankish Empire and England. Possible Frisian trading place. Built over and destroyed by sand extraction.
Dankirke	Denmark	Danish settlement near Ribe from the 3 rd century BC – 6 th century AD, Frisian contact point with Danes; some houses, a hall building and finds typical of market places, such as valuable imports, were excavated
Dorestad	The Netherlands	Site inhabited from AD 675 AD onwards. After repeated raiding and destruction by Vikings, it was deserted and activities moved to Tiel, Deventer and Zutphen. Its layout is only partially known but very structured along the river. As a mint, it produced a large quantity of Frisian coins for long-distance trade from the mid 6 th century. Situated in Frisian territory but most likely controlled by the Frankish kings. First permanent trading place based on models from England and the Frankish domain. Built over and destroyed by the river.
Deventer and Zutphen	The Netherlands	Proto-urban settlements with central functions for trade and religion (Deventer) and military and administration (Zutphen). Early inhabited areas developed from the 9 th century. Ramparts from c. AD 882. Elaborate multi-storey houses in Deventer from the late 10 th century. Largely Frankish dominated. Built over by the modern town.
Domburg	The Netherlands	Settlement site with numerous graves and houses from the 7 th – 9 th century on the former island of Walcheren. Possibly a trading centre like Dorestad.
Wijnaldum	The Netherlands	Terp alignment in Northern Westergo near Harlingen, consisting of nine mounds in a row built alongside natural channels. Shows constructions essential for settlement and survival in the Wadden Sea area but is also a good representative of a central place for regional power, communication and trade. Testifies to an early adaption to the extreme natural surroundings with regular flooding. Still extant, one mound has been partly excavated.
Oost-Souburg	The Netherlands	Ring fortress, which probably served as protection against Viking raids from the 9 th century and may have been a model for the Trelleborg fortresses in Denmark. Typical type of fortress for low-lying geographical situations. Built over today.

TABLE A5

	STATE PARTY	BRIEF DESCRIPTION
Upstalsboom	Germany	Thing site near Aurich, East Frisia, Germany, with alleged position marked today by a stone. Served as the meeting place for the free Frisian provinces, also calling themselves Die Sieben Seelande (The Seven Sea Countries).
Salt Extraction in the North Frisian Wadden Sea	Germany	Widespread traces of salt extraction can still be found on the mud flats of the North Frisian Wadden Sea area, Germany; a natural World Heritage Site. Production was mainly decentralised, taking place on farms in the High Middle Ages (11 th century onwards).
Early Embanked Polders in Westergoo and Ostergoo	The Netherlands	Old dikes and drainage channels together with dwelling mounds from the late 10 th and early 11 th century in West Frisia, The Netherlands. They mark the beginning of land reclamation processes in the Wadden Sea area. These extraordinary achievements of engineering and adaptation to nature are unique to the Frisians. Development led to securing of the existing salt marsh islands against seasonal flooding and to the reclamation of new land from the sea.
